[From an Occasional Correspondent.]

Westward Ho!"

SATURDAY, AUGUST 17.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 10, 1878. To the Editor of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, It was a clear July day-not too hot or too cold, but one of those delightful days when the pure azure forms the great dome above us, and resting midway between the horizon and the mighty vault were ing in its prime, and the gentle winds caused the boughs of every tree to rise and fall in softest murmurs, and every leaf to laugh with a merry, pleasing cadence-a day when the northern breezes swept across Lake Erie, here and there tossing its waters into tiny "white caps," and reaching the traveler as he stood at the depot, fanned his cheek with its refreshing draught and caused the blood to glow and his spirits to bound in the bright anticipations of the journey before him. Such was the day as we stood at the Union Depot in Cleveland, with baggage in hand, waiting for the time to arrive for the departure of the west bound train by the C. C.

We had not long to wait. All was bustle and hurry and haste. With tickets secured and trunk checked as far as St. Louis, we took our seat, and form, soon we espied a friend and fellow-traveler going as far as Indianapolis. So here was jolly company. A short time sufficed to carry us from the din and bustle of the city, and soon we were rushing ours was to be a long ride, we began to look about us to see whom we had for companions in our coach. There were none very elegant nor any very handsome. The coach we were in was not over-burdened or crowded. On the opposite side, and a little back of us, sat two young ladies in neat linen duster suits, but as their backs were turned towards us we could not see who they were or what their charms, which so attracted the attention of a young man with an old blue suit and a military cap, but an armless sleeve on his left side. They were evidently strangers to each other, but the young man was "smitten. Beyond these sat a German Jew group, consisting of father and mother, a promising daughter and an affectionate aunt-a tyrant, a slave and drudge and her sympathisers. Again and again the poor woman passed and repassed us, always going to the water cooler. Soon the strong odor of whisky pervaded the coach, and the man was freely imbibing. Not content with one bottle or flask, but his two quart bottles were both freely patronized. He rolled and tumbled in his seat like an overfed hog-a poor, besotted specimen of humanity-a perfect beast. The appearance of the party betokened the command of wealth; but, oh, what a picture of woe and misery to contemplate! Who can foretell its future without a shudder, or who would wish to accept such a condition? And yet we slander and condemn the noble temperance reformers. The sight was too much for the two young ladies, and getting up, they came and occupied a seat just in front of my companion and myself. It was not long before our military-appearing friend joined them, but had care-sweets which may have been left by the sirup. fully slipped on a white cotton glove while they were finally asked the younger one, to whom he was evireverse his seat, and if she would not like it. It was readily accepted, with a pleasant "Thank you," and no sooner said than done; and the young miss, who had evidently traveled far, reached for her shawl bundle, and placing it for a pillow, quietly and deliberately laid herself down to rest. He had stood for love on a "railway train." At one point a newly-married couple arrived at the depot just in time to reach the train and have the loving husband pile the bandboxes with tenderest care into the coach and take their seat, when the shrill whistle was heard and off we were again-no time for a ticket to be purchased, but the fare must be paid on the train.

ways have to rush through life like this!" But life is all a chase, and he who would win must run; but many of us only too late discover that we have been chasing a " will-o'-the-wisp." The crops never could have looked more promising. has been badly lowered by the storms, and partly by its own weight, but no special damage is anticipated unless wet weather should continue. The cat crop is looking finely, and has great promise. Logan county crops present the finest appearance. All stand erect, and the wheat and earlier crops just ready to be harvested. Although hay harvest seems to have little done, and much remains yet uncut, never could the grain present a finer appearance than through the level county of Logan. Before passing on, I should say a word for " mine king." Not only was there a large variety, but a large quantity, and while all the surroundings and accompaniments were the neatest and the cleanest, everything was cooked in such perfection that no croaking was needed, and a connoisseur in the culiwhich will stand the Baggage Smashers, and which are only nary art would have been delighted-and all for the modest sum of 50 cents. One cannot but be struck with the excellent appearance of the roads in this county, which speaks well for its Commissioners. Sydney, Shelby's county seat, is a model of neatness and thrift; no dilapidated houses, barns with roofs hanging at one corner, or fences in distress. It is evident a spirit of thrift and enterprise is prevalent here. Night had now fairly set in, and as the soft mantle of darkness settled around us we amused ourselves by watching the countless myriads of fire-flies dancing hither and thither with their tiny light, forcibly carrying us back to a night in the Bay of Manzanilla. when each dip of the our revealed a phosphorescent splendor rarely exceeded elsewhere. We reached Indianapolis at 11 p.m., and here my friend and I separated, I promising to stay over and spend a day or two with him on my return. As soon as the baggage was attended to and the exchange of engines made, we were off again. When we wakened in the morning we found ourselves speeding through the level lands of Illinois, As to coin paper money. [See authorities above and Indiana far behind. It was a soft, clear morning, and a bright sun rose almost behind us. On the north was a hazy horizon, while to the south hung banks of fleecy clouds, and far as the eye could take who are penned up, even in our most beautiful cities, get no idea of the grand expanse of this continent till we traverse its far-stretched prairies, and even then the mind cannot grasp its magnitude or realize its productive capabilities. The soil is a black clay loam-rich, indeed, as its productions attest. The

They have given place to the esage orange hedge and the running board fence, and one does not see the fence rows buried and stocked with weeds and briers, much to the annoyance of adjoining farms, but all is clean and trim. We arrived at East St. Louis, where the opposing city factions now sit in secret conclave-a disgrace to law and order and a dishonor to this great Republic. We crossed the Mississippi by the famous Captain Eads' bridge, which has swamped three times three man's engineering skill and courage; and passing through the tunnel, enter the Union depot and find ourselves in the great rival city of Chicago, being a unit in its one-half millon surging, restless mans of beyond one's means; speculation; investigating MIKIALA.

Sugar-Making in the French West Indies. A system of central factories has been adopted within a few years in the French West India islands of Martinique and Guadeloupe, for the manufacture of sugar. The system is a substitute for the long-practiced method of making the sugar by individuals upon the plantations where agriculture from manufacture, and by a concentration of capital, somewhat upon the co-operative system, to accomplish what the isolated planter was unable to do. The experiment, ap13 Choice Ales, Wines, Liquors, Cigars, &c made upon a large scale during a series of years, it is maintained, has fully demonstrated the soundness of the principle. The central factories, or usines, as they are called, are owned by jointstock companies, by which the sugar-cane is these companies, a certain per cent. of the value of the care being allowed the planter, the price being regulated by the market at Point-a-Pitre at the time the cane is delivered. The system seems to have proved a success, affording to the manufacturing interest a handsome profit, and, by leaving the planter free to devote himself to tivation of the cane. The government of the island of Jamajea recently appointed a commission to visit the French islands, and inquire into the working of this central sugar-factory system. The Department of Agriculture has received, through the Department of State, the report of these comissioners. Their examinations were made during the last summer, and the results, as banks of fleecy clouds; when all nature was rejoic- stated by them, are not without interest and value to the sugar-producers of the United States. The largest central factory in the French islands is that which is commonly called the "Usine d'Arboussier," at Point-a-Pitre (St. Louis), the chief commercial station of the island. The factory is in the suburbs of this sea-port, and is constructed upon the grandest scale, having all the improvements in machinery and the manufacture of sugar devised by modern science. The cost of it was upward of a million of dollars, and its capacity of manufacture is equal to 10,000

process of manufacture, as described by the com-

The bagasse being elevated by power to a platform over the boilers, the juice, on leaving the mill-bed, falls through three strainers into a tank, which has a double bottom, heated by steam. It is treated here with a little bisulphite of lime, and is then run into a montejus. along through the rich farms on either side. As This montejus, by steam, sends the juice up to the clarifiers, where it is heated in the ordinary way and tempered with lime properly. From this it is passed to the charcoal-filters, through which it gravitates, and then passes by a gutter into a receiver. From this it is passed to a montejus, and is thrown up by steam into a cistern over the triple-effet. From this cistern it gravitates into the triple-effet, passing from the first to the second, and from the second to the third boiler, as the attendant wishes. When it leaves the boiler it is immediately passed over new reburned charcoal. It gravitates through this and falls into another receiver, from which the vacuumpan takes it up and boils it to sugar. The firstquality sugar is generally crystallized in the pan, and is then dropped into sugar-boxes, which stand seven feet from the ground; under these boxes a little charging-vessel runs on a railway that is hung from the bottom of the said boxes, and this vessel conveys the sugar over the centrifugals, where it is cured; the molasses from this being boiled up, when found in good condition, with the sirup of the following day. When this molasses is thick and clammy it is boiled into a jelly by itself and dropped into sugar-boxes, where it is allowed to granulate for a number of days. This makes the second-quality sugar, and AN ASSORTED CARGO the molasses from this, along with the skimmings and subsidings of clarifiers, goes to make rum. The juice that leaves the clarifiers does not pass over fresh charcoal, but follows the sirup from the triple-effet, thus assisting to wash out the Eight of the factories, at considerable cost, have been erected within the last two years, In Lorain and Huron counties much of the wheat and others are now in process of crection. They seem everywhere, by increasing the facilities of manufacture, to have stimulated the planters to increased production of the cane. In speaking of the difference between the tillage of those who sell their canes to the usines and those who manufacture at home, it is remarked that in the one case the canes are no sooner out of the fields than the gangs and stock are at work preparing the land for the next crop, and all the fields are tidy and clean.
